

Working Students (m/f/d) – Knowledge Research,
Transition to Regenerativity, Berlin Centre

Dear Students,

Regenerative investments and entrepreneurship with a triple positive impact - economic, ecological, and social - are the focus of our activities.

For us, sustaining the status quo is not sufficient. Regenerative to us means not only the preservation of soil, biodiversity, and natural cycles such as the water balance, but importantly the transition to processes of regeneration. At the same time, we are convinced that others can only be persuaded to follow us, if we are economically successful.

Our conceptual impact framework is oriented along the UN SDGs. Thematically we focus on the transition to regenerative agriculture, sustainable food systems and impact-oriented finance. We think internationally, beyond our current focus on Latin America and Europe.

What you do:

We are eager to expand our knowledge and network. To achieve this, we are looking for motivated students to support us in our exciting research activities. Your responsibilities:

- Conducting research on relevant organisations and practices globally, focusing beyond established entities on pioneering contributors to regenerative transition.
- We may e.g. also follow up on mentions of the term "regenerative" at COP28 UAE.
- Use AI language models for decision making, prioritization, and research again.

Your results will have an important influence on our future projects and help us to keep our finger on the pulse.

What you have:

- Strong communication, research, and analytical skills,
- a high affinity for modern media,
- self-motivated, independent, and reliable way of working,
- explicit commitment to complete projects,
- a long-term cooperation is desired,
- fluent English and German; Spanish is a welcome plus.

What we offer:

- Meaningful work content a valuable, purpose-driven work experience,
- integration into a highly committed and experienced team,
- involvement in work that opens novel paths to lighthouse projects,
- workplace will be provided in the centre of Berlin to promote communicative exchange,
- competitive remuneration.

Please send your application documents to schneider@auryngr.de. We look forward to getting to know you!
